The Orphan Lambs. At lambing time the shepherd has no small difficulty in regulating the family circles of his charges. One ewe has died, leaving a couple of orphans on his hands; another has one lamb more than she can nourish; and so on. These surplus youngsters are divided, as far as possible, amongst the ewes which have only one lamb each. But there often remain two or three which have to be brought up by hand on cow's milk, a special feeding-can—sometimes an infant's ordinary feeding-bottle—being employed.
